
Shoah

Wikipedia • The Holocaust, known in Hebrew as the Shoah, was the genocide of European Jews during World War II. From 1941 to 1945, Nazi Germany and its collaborators systematically murdered some six million Jews across German-occupied Europe, around two-thirds of Europe's Jewish population.

When The Rockefellers Armed The Nazis: A Diabolical History

The Rockefeller family wealth, while it holds the same name that graces universities, hospitals, and charitable foundations across America, it also appears on technical blueprints found in the ruins of Auschwitz, where American industrial processes were used to extract maximum profit from slave labor.

Every American school child learns that the Rockefellers built their empire on oil, but what they don't teach is how that empire helped fuel the Nazi war machine that murdered millions.

While young Americans died on D-Day beaches, Rockefeller-controlled Standard Oil was secretly teaching German chemists how to manufacture the high-octane aviation fuel that powered Luftwaffe fighters strafing Allied soldiers.

This wasn't accidental collaboration or naive business dealing but a calculated partnership that continued even after Pearl Harbor, when providing aid to Nazi Germany became literal treason against the United States.

Standard Oil executives slid thirty million dollars across the table to IG Farben for hydrogenation technology that would soon fuel the Wehrmacht's blitzkrieg across Europe.

Walter C. Teagle orchestrated this deal as Standard Oil's president, collecting German industrial contacts like rare stamps and accepting appointment to IG Farben's American board in April 1929.

By 1930, they had created JASCO—the Joint American Study Company—in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, holding the keys to synthetic rubber production essential for military vehicles when natural rubber supplies were cut off.

The U.S. Army Air Corps warning arrived at Standard Oil headquarters in 1935, identifying tetraethyl lead as crucial for German fighter planes being built in hidden factories.

Within months of receiving orders to never share this technology, Ethyl Gasoline Corporation technicians were on ships bound for Hamburg with briefcases full of production secrets.

Without tetraethyl lead, the Messerschmitt Bf 109 was just an expensive glider, the Stuka dive bomber a metal sculpture.

A captured German document from 1944 revealed the magnitude of this betrayal: "Without tetraethyl-lead the present methods of warfare would be impossible."

Every Heinkel bomber over London, every fighter plane strafing refugees on French roads flew on fuel made possible by Standard Oil's treason.

· Auschwitz-Monowitz bore Standard Oil patent numbers alongside IG Farben specifications, American innovation stamped on architectural plans for industrial murder.

Twelve thousand prisoners crowded into Auschwitz III barracks, waking each dawn to face machinery designed in American laboratories while IG Farben paid the SS three to four Reichsmarks per day per prisoner.

The life expectancy calculations were as precise as any chemical formula: Jews lasted three to four months, sometimes less.

Dental gold from Auschwitz arrived at the Reichsbank in boxes that reeked of Zyklon B, processed with banker's precision into standardized ingots that flowed through American-designed channels into Swiss banks.

Chase Manhattan Bank pioneered the profit model, earning over five hundred thousand dollars from refugee misery while serving as Nazi Germany's banker even after Pearl Harbor.

When justice finally arrived, Standard Oil negotiated a settlement of fifty thousand dollars in fines for enabling the Nazi war machine—less than the company earned in a single day.

Not one executive faced criminal charges for knowingly arming America's enemies while American soldiers died fighting the Wehrmacht they had helped fuel.

How evil must you be to collect gold fillings from the ashes in a human furnace. That's about the most awful thing I've ever contemplated.
